CONTENTS.

ART. I.—NOVELISTS AND NOVELS	PAGE 1
Advantages of fiction; teaching of moral lessons, cultivation of imagination—Evil of immoral books: an illustrative fable—Disadvantages attending novel-reading—Dangers of realism—Duty of novelists and novel-readers.
ART. II.—THE PROGRESS OF NIHILISM	9
The progress of Nihilism alarming from its positive side: has its own beatitudes; is, indeed, a false religion coming to the birth—Whence come the "new barbarians" and what they threaten—The Nihilist suffers from Well-Schmerz —He hates religion—Is the movement a matter of races?—Imperfect education one of the resources of anarchy—Hatred of the Catholic Church, the enemy of anarchy; yet, rightly understood, Catholicism alone has countervailing promises for suffering society—Present distress due to spiritual progress not having kept pace with physical progress—The Gospel for the nineteenth century is the "Word of Life" in the Treasury of the Church properly brought home to the multitudes—In what manner the Church will work in effecting good, and what the mission of zealous Catholics.
ART. III.—THE FUTURE OF PETROLEUM	31
Petroleum and coal, rivals in the field of usefulness—Chemical accounts of origin and nature of petroleum; the great petroleum deposit zone—The Pitch Lake of Trinidad—The modern development of rock-oil supply; how they "struck ile" in Pennsylvania—How the wells are bored and worked; methods of transport and refining into various products—The future centre of supply in the Caucasus; works at Baku—Oil fountains a special feature of the Caucasus region—Story of the Nobel family; inventions for transport of the oil; cistern-steamers on the Caspian—Immense trade done by the Nobel Brothers: European markets opening to Russian oil—A reserve oil district on the Euxine—Other petroleum deposits in Asia, in Europe, in Egypt—Forthcoming Petroleum Exhibition in St. Petersburg—Petroleum as fuel for steam-driven machinery.

ART. IV.—PRO VIVIS ET DEFUNCTIS 65

Lofty title of Father Amherst's book; which is rather "Mémoires pour servir" than a History—An example of author's historical method in his account of the Relief Act of 1778: in telling what Catholics at the time thought of it, he is at his best; not so in his comments on the affair—His strictures on the Catholic Address to George III. considered—The author's practical conclusions engrafted on his narrative: 1. His strictures on the Catholic young men of the present day; 2. His discontent with the "Catholic Union"—Statement of the spirit and work of the Catholic Union.

ART. V.—PLATO'S "ATLANTIS" AND THE "PERIPLUS" OF HANNO 91

Examination of Lord Arundell's book, "The Secret of Plato's Atlantis," in which he proposes to show—1. That the Mosaic deluge has no connection with the submersion of Plato's Atlantis—Examination of his proofs that (a) the submersion of Atlantis is only legend, and that (b) it is based on the "Periplus" of Hanno; Conclusion: that his argument is without solid foundation and fails—He proposes to show—2. That universal popular tradition establishes the truth of a universal Biblical Deluge—His argument, even if accepted, unequal to his conclusion—Value of M. Mer's book on the "Periplus" of Hanno, a study made on the spot.

ART. VI.—THE FIRST CHINESE PHILOSOPHER; OR, THE SYSTEM OF LAO-TZE 105

Lao-tze, the first to attack the primitive Monotheism of the Chinese—His life: scantiness of records; legendary details—What traces of Scripture doctrine in his writings—An exposé of his doctrine: His Ontology—The Nature of the Supreme Being: did he call It, Jehovah?—The origin of Earth and Heaven; it is not clear how far he is a Pantheist: His Ethics: 1. Man is endowed with free will; 2. Man naturally good;

Absolute perfection of Tao the model of all beings: Virtues prescribed—His Politics; his object to stigmatize the tyranny and corruption in Court and Administration—His laws for princes and rulers; his ideal government—Summary and appreciation of his teaching.

ART. VII.—CANADIAN OPINION ON THE QUESTION OF HOME
RULE 128

The Canadian an unprejudiced judge, desirous of promoting interests of the United Kingdom—Spectacle of the present English House of Commons; need of change—The Irish not disloyal; they have been unfairly treated—The present system has failed: further repression to be condemned; as also a policy of small concessions—Self-government in purely Irish matters a just and right concession to a reasonable claim—The form which Home Rule should take; an adoption of the federal system partly imitated from that of the United States, partly from that of Canada—A proposed outline scheme; Lower and Upper House—Extent of business with jurisdiction of the local Legislature—Representation of Ireland in the Imperial Commons—Objection to Home Rule answered.

RECORD OF ROMAN DOCUMENTS (at the end).

CONTENTS.

ART. I.—WHAT TO DO WITH THE LANDOWNERS	243
Present mental confusion about the land question—Three theories teachable thereon; the Socialist, the Darwinian, the Christian; can the last give clear and definite principles of ownership?—How much cultivated land each family may occupy: the Christian theory can justify the accumulation of land by one man—Landlords, however, have grave obligations; which should extend to mortgagees—The rights of Government—Morality of peasant life in various countries: a true notion of the necessity and the character of poverty—The balance between town and country—Duties of Government towards landlords and the land, and towards labourers.
ART. II.—LONGFELLOW	260
Boyhood and early influences—Is appointed Professor of Modern Languages; his first marriage, and visit to Europe—Longfellow an ardent and persistent worker—His friendships: he is bored with unknown visitors and troublesome letters—His short poems, inspirations of genuine emotion: examples—His method of work with the long poems—He is proof against cheap criticism; extremely sensitive to influences of weather and the seasons; has a delicate sense of humour—What was Longfellow's religion? Seems to have felt the influences of Catholic ritual deeply, but with only poetic appreciation—His knowledge of Catholic teaching and life—His second wife is burned to death—Finds some relief in translating Dante—Value of his poems is that they teach faith in God; trust in His providence; patient struggle here, with hope of immortality.
ART. III.—FACILITIES OF MODERN PILGRIMAGE	295
How is it that Catholics, especially English Catholics, have ceased to feel for the Holy Land the vivid interest once felt by crusaders and pilgrims?—Object of article to explain how small is now the difficulty of a Palestine pilgrimage and how great the advantage—Alternative routes according to health, wealth, and leisure; the question of being “personally conducted”—Jerusalem: the Dead Sea: Nazareth: Lake of Galilee: Beyrout and Damascus—Value of a visit to Holy Land towards better appreciation of the Holy Scriptures—Social lessons to be learned from Oriental peoples.

ART. IV.—WHERE WAS ST. PATRICK BORN? 314

Two claimants to the honour only need be considered, Boulogne, and Killpatrick—Dr. Lanigan defends the former: the claim briefly disposed of—Archbishop Moran the patron of Killpatrick: his twelve arguments replied to in detail—Some direct proofs against the claim of Killpatrick—Present writer's opinion that so early as the eighth century the few words of the “Lives” on which above arguments built were corrupted—A corrected reading suggested; it leads to conclusion that St. Patrick was born near Bath.

ART. V.—SOCIAL DISTURBANCES—THEIR CAUSE AND CURE 335

Socialists and Communists argue as if inequality existed only in land distribution—Inequality is, however, the universal law of nature in both spiritual and material worlds—Poverty a necessity, and moreover not an evil in itself—What are the checks to a “tendency to appropriate” on the part of the needy? an example in an individual—The crowd and the few rich; spread of anarchical doctrines; some extracts to illustrate the Freiheit propagandism—The cause of agitation is knowledge: the cure is to teach the crowd how to use it—The Gospel again needs to be preached “to the poor”—Motives and comfort in the true teachings of Our Lord.

ART. VI.—THE SECRET OF PLATO'S ATLANTIS—A REPLY 351

A criticism of Lord Arundell's “Secret of Plato's Atlantis” in the last number of the DUBLIN REVIEW, it is here taken for granted was from the pen of the late Abbé Motais: detailed replies to the various heads of his criticism—On the general question seems to have assumed that the “Secret of Plato's Atlantis” was written in proof of the universality of the Deluge: a reply—When the non-universality theory has been proved to be tenable, it does not yet follow that the case is proved.

ART. VII.—PRESENT POSITION OF CHINA

Varied physiognomy of the country, combined in China with a homogeneous race of inhabitants—Social organization : spirit worship—The three recognized religions of China : Peking, the sacred capital—Present political organization of China—Chinese apotheosis of "Competitive Examination"—Indications that China is slowly abandoning her position of seclusion and about to take her place among the nations—The tea-trade, and silk-trade—England and the opium-trade; evils of opium-smoking : spread of the practice among European races—Cotton-trade—A Buddhist pilgrimage—History of Christianity in China : present prospects.

ART. VIII.—FREDERICK LUCAS 392

Opportuneness and advantages of this Life—Lucas's general character : his outspokenness and quickness to apologize and make the amende honorable—He studies law : becomes a Catholic; commences the Tablet newspaper—Sketch of the decade 1840–1850—Lucas the first promoter of the Society of St. Vincent de Paul in the United Kingdom, and of other Associations—Spirit in which Lucas acted as an editor : the Pope's opinion thereon—He goes to Ireland and becomes a Repealer—Qualifications needful in a Catholic newspaper editor : Lucas a strong writer.
